Einstein

realized that the key concept, on which all comparisons between differently moving observers and frames of reference depended, is the notion of universal, or absolute, simultaneity; that is to say, the proposition that two events that appear simultaneous to any one observer will also be judged

to take place at the same time by all other observers.

will only be a fragment of time full of memories,

Some will remember it one way, and others another.
